Act One

(The scene opens in the courtroom as the Defense attorney begins his summation)

Mr. Jones. There were many strange things going on. Any of us in that situation would not be at our normal state of mind. Especially when we see strange things. Like no power at all not any in the cars, the lights the stove, and things that don't even need power. (Turns to the jury and raises his voice) Like a portable radio it would work with no electricity, don't you think we might question it. But, then when things like not cars working we might get a little freaked out when one car just out of the blue just turns on all by itself. He was simply afraid.

Then the prosecutor would say something like “He could have just as easily asked the man “Who are you? What are you doing here?” He didn’t have to shoot first. When you are in a strange situation like that you don’t go and murder someone!”
